NEW YORK, March 20 .- A large force of men worked on the ruins of the Windsor Hotel all night. Part of the rear wall and chimney on the Forty-seventh-street side were still standing at a late hour. It is a common cloth button and is used only by manufacturers of ready-made clothing. This fact and the fact that the kid gloves are of a poor quality lead to the belief that the woman was not a guest, but an employe of the hotel. One of

Thomas P. Ochiltree's trunks was found, the contents quite uninjured.

A great deal of work was done on the Fifth-avenue side of the heap. The office safe was dug out there; it was uncovered and left under guard of the police. It was intact, so far as could be told from passing observation. The clerk of the hotel said that this was a small safe which contained no important papers. The big office safe, he thought, had gone through to the sub-basement, and would not be found for some time. The big safe contains a list of the hotel employes. Mrs. Maxwell, a guest of Mrs. McKinley, told the officer that a young man did assist her from the apartments, and that he did throw a bath robe over her, as Kain alleges, but she declares that after he had done this, while conducting her from the burning building he attempted to tear the diamond rings from her fingers and only desisted when she screamed. Although much excited and hysterical, Mrs. Maxwell remembered enough of her assailant to describe him to the officer. The detective said the description was a good one of Kain. The latter has a large scar on his left temple which may lead to his ultimate identification. Kain was remanded to police headquarters until to-morrow, so that he may be taken before Mrs. Maxwell.

ST. LOUIS, March 20.-Edward C. Becker purchased the St. Louis club franchise from the creditors' syndicate to-day. Negotiations for the deal were begun yesterday afternoon, when the creditors met together. Mr. Becker attended the meeting with Receiver Muckenfuss, who acted as his spokesman, Mr. Becker being ill from tonsilitis. Considerable time was spent in discussion, the matter of recognition by the League being the sole subject of argument. Mr. Becker offered $35,000 outright, clear of his own preferred claims, but asked for delay until to-day to get assurances from his League friends that he would be recognized. Mr. Becker contended that his possession of a majority of the stock of the Sportsman's Park and club and bis standing as a creditor put him in a position to demand recognition by the League, which in all probability would be denied an outsider. His argument had weight with the creditors and both sides agreed to wait until to-day to resume negotiations. Speaking of the West Indies, Mr. Chamberlain said he thought it was impossible to give those islands representation in the government. It would be absurd, he added, to universally enfranchise the negro. The experience with the Port of Spain (Trinidad) municipal council, the colonial minister pointed out, had not encouraged extension in that direction, and the prevailing system under the control of the Colonial Office was the best which could be adopted under the Turning to the Transvaal, Mr. Chamber-

Mr. Chamberlain then claimed that the proposed change in the franchise was not of the slightest value; that dynamite was still a monopoly, and that there had been no advance toward remedying other grievances. Continuing, Mr. Chamberlain asserted that if President Kruger would give the Johannesburgers a real municipality, with control of their own educational system and civil police, as he could do without the slightest derogation to the interests and dignity of the Transvaal, he would remove | China Willing to Consider Italy's Denine out of ten uitlanders' grievances. Great Britain, Mr. Chamberlain then pointed out, could only intervene in the event of a breach of the London convention, or, if the comity of nations was not observed, as the paramount power in South Africa, Great Britain could make friendly suggestions. but he (Mr. Chamberlain) did not believe for a moment that they would be successfu now, and therefore it would be undignifie to make them. Mr. Chamberlain concludes with saying: "As long as the present condi tions continue they constitute a real danger. We are watching the situation most care fully, but thus far there has been nothing to justify an ultimatum, and, failing compliance, war, which seems to have been suggested by a previous speaker."

In the course of a discussion of the ernment's policy in China William St. John Brodrick, parliamentary secretary for the Foreign Office, defended the plan of dealing direct with the Tsung Li Yamen and declared the suggestion that Great Britain should instead "go straight to other powers" absolutely untenable in the present condition of affairs. After asserting that Rear Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, in his public declarations respecting the best course to pursue, did not represent the views of the government, Mr. Brodrick said: "We ought to be more careful lest we step into the position of having insisted on concessions, or, having undertaken the reorganization of the Chinese army and navy, that we do not by these successive steps underisted on both sides. Sir Charles Dilke, Radical member for the

Some sort of inexact accounts had crept out, but it woulbe extremely undesirable for him, he de clared, to give either contradiction or affirmation, and the report must be accepted with considerable reserve.
